A PEER-REVIEWED REFEREED JOURNAL

The ELEGBAKNA Journal Of Theatre And Film Studies (ISSN: 1595-2800) is a prestigious online academic peer-reviewed journal from Nigeria, dedicated to advancing the fields of Theatre and Film Studies. Published thrice annually, the journal has established itself as a significant platform for scholarly discourse, haven successfully released two issues of RSUJTFS to date.

For the upcoming issue, Vol. vi, scheduled for publication in May 2026, we invite contributions from university and college teachers, scholars, professionals, postgraduate students, young researchers, and practicing theatricians. This is an opportunity to share your insights, research, and expertise with an international audience of peers and enthusiasts.

SCOPE AND FOCUS

The ELEGBAKNA Journal of Theatre and Film Studies seeks scholarly submissions that explore a wide array of topics within Theatre and Film Studies. We are interested in works that:

- Develop new theoretical frameworks
- Report empirical and analytical research
- Present critical discourses
- Apply theories to case studies
- Introduce innovative research methodologies

Our aim is to foster a rich academic dialogue that bridges traditional and contemporary perspectives in Theatre and Film Studies.

TYPES OF SUBMISSIONS

We welcome submissions in the following formats:

- Research Articles: Original research papers utilizing rigorous methodologies.
- Commentaries: Opinion-based pieces reflecting practical field experiences from esteemed actors, playwrights, directors, and craftsmen. Potential interviewers must discuss their profiles with the Editor before submission.
- Case Studies: In-depth analyses of specific instances within the field.

- Interviews: Conversations with notable figures in Theatre and Film.
- Book Reviews: Critical evaluations of published books (no e-books) on Theatre or related fields.
- Performance Reviews: Reviews of theatrical performances staged from 2020 till date

SUGGESTED THEMES AND TOPICS

We encourage submissions on a variety of themes, including but not limited to:

- History of Theatre: Exploring the evolution and historical context of theatrical practices.
- International Theatre: Comparative studies and global perspectives on theatre.
- Theatre Production & Stage Craft: Innovations and techniques in production and stage design.
- Acting and Directing: Methods, pedagogy, and case studies in acting and directing.
- Dramaturgy: The art and theory of dramatic composition and theatrical representation.
- Theatre for Development (TfD): Using theatre as a tool for social change and community development.
- Theatre, Society & Politics: Examining the interplay between theatre and sociopolitical issues.
- Theatre of the Oppressed: Theories and practices of transformative theatre.
- Poor Theatre: Exploring minimalistic approaches and their impact.
- Performance Studies: Interdisciplinary approaches to the study of performance.
- Therapeutic Theatre: Using theatre as a medium for healing and therapy.
- Theatre Aesthetics: Critical discussions on the aesthetics of theatre.
- Theatre Research: Methodologies and approaches in theatre research.
- Folk Theatre: The significance and practices of traditional and folk theatre.
- Theatre Training & Workshops: Innovative training methods and workshop practices.
- Dramatic Theory and Criticism: Theoretical and critical analysis of dramatic works.
- Dramatic Literature: Studies in dramatic texts and playwriting.
- Theatre & Allied Arts: Intersections with cinema, media, communication, and photography.

Authors are encouraged to explore beyond these suggested themes.

We look forward to receiving your scholarly contributions and to fostering an engaging and insightful dialogue within the vibrant fields of Theatre and Film Studies. This is an opportunity to share your research and ideas with a global audience, contributing to the advancement of knowledge and practice in these dynamic disciplines.

EDITORIAL NOTE
ELEGBAKNA JOURNAL OF THEATRE AND FILM STUDIES - VOLUME 7

It is with profound pleasure and a deep sense of academic responsibility that I present Elegbakna Journal of Theatre and Film Studies, Volume 7 to the scholarly community. Since its inception, Elegbakna has positioned itself as a credible forum for the interrogation of ideas, theories, and practices within Theatre, Film, and allied performance disciplines. This volume reaffirms that mandate by foregrounding scholarship that is both rooted in African epistemologies and engaged in global intellectual conversations. Our objective remains to produce knowledge that is rigorous, contextually relevant, and capable of shaping policy, pedagogy, and practice.

The Editorial Team remains committed to our time-honoured tradition of rigorous double-blind peer review. We recognise that the value of academic publishing lies not only in the quality of ideas but also in the efficiency of their dissemination. In this regard, we have streamlined our editorial processes to ensure that contributors experience minimal delay without any compromise to scholarly standards. This balance between timeliness and rigour is essential if the journal is to remain responsive to the dynamic needs of researchers, teachers, and practitioners in the humanities and creative arts.

Volume 7 presents a robust collection of scholarly articles drawn from English, Linguistics, Language, Theatre and Film Studies, Film and Multimedia Studies, History and cognate disciplines. The contributions in this edition engage a wide spectrum of theoretical and methodological paradigms, ranging from postcolonial critique and cultural studies to stylistics, pragmatics, performance theory, and screen aesthetics. Collectively, these essays interrogate pressing questions concerning identity, representation, technology, language politics, and the evolving aesthetics of stage and screen. By so doing, they extend existing scholarship and open new avenues for critical inquiry within and beyond the African context.

In addition to peer-reviewed articles, this volume features Reports on the Authors' Hub Monthly Panel Discussions held over a period of five months. The Authors' Hub was conceived as an interdisciplinary platform for dialogue between the academy, the publishing industry, and creative practitioners. The discussions were designed to interrogate contemporary challenges and opportunities in literary and media production. The reports included here serve as an archival record of these engagements and demonstrate the journal's commitment to public scholarship and knowledge exchange beyond conventional academic formats.

The February session focused on AI and the Future of Creative Writing. Panellists examined the ethical, aesthetic, and economic implications of generative artificial intelligence for authorship, copyright, and narrative innovation. The conversation foregrounded concerns about technological determinism while also exploring how AI tools might augment rather than replace human creativity. The March discussion, The Art and Business of Writing: What Young Writers Should Know, provided critical insights into literary entrepreneurship, branding, intellectual property, and the economics of publishing in a digital age. It sought to equip emerging writers with both artistic and professional competencies.

In April, the Hub convened a timely dialogue on Interrogating the Absence of Emerging African Writers in School Curricula. The discourse interrogated issues of canon formation, institutional gatekeeping, and the politics of knowledge production within educational systems. Contributors argued for a more inclusive curriculum that reflects contemporary African literary voices and responds to the cultural realities of learners. The June session, Literary Networking: The Benefits of Online Literary Communities, examined how digital platforms have reconfigured literary production, reception, and mentorship. The discussion highlighted the democratising potential of online spaces while also noting challenges of visibility, monetisation, and critical evaluation.

The inclusion of these panel reports underscores our conviction that academic journals must not be insulated from the lived realities of creative practice. Scholarship gains greater traction when it engages directly with practitioners, students, and the public. By documenting these conversations, Elegbakna seeks to bridge the perceived divide between theory and practice, and to position the journal as a site for both critical reflection and professional development. We believe this approach strengthens the relevance and impact of humanities scholarship in the twenty-first century.

In conclusion, I wish to express our sincere gratitude to all contributors, anonymous reviewers, editorial assistants, and readers whose intellectual labour and goodwill sustain Elegbakna. Your commitment to critical thought, creative expression, and academic excellence ensures that the journal continues to serve as a vital repository for scholarship in English, Language, Linguistics, Theatre, Film, and Multimedia Studies. We look forward to your continued engagement as we advance the frontiers of knowledge in Africa and globally.
